Order in a chronological sequence the events below.

Muhammed was born around 570 in the city of Mecca. He soon became orphan and lived with his grandfather first, then with an uncle. He worked with camels and sheep.

That creature told him about an ancient beduin god, Allah, who created the world, who knows everything and can everything.

Since then, Muhammed established the guidelines of a new monotheistic-centred religion.

When he was 40, he went up the mount Hira and he found there a holy creature, identified as the angel Gabriel

Rich people and priests are becoming more and more hostile to the new religion, so that Mohamed needed to move in year 622 to the city of Medina (egira).

When he was about 25 years old, he married Khadiga, a rich widow. He could administrate her finances and travel a lot for trading purpose all over Arabian peninsula.

During the next two years, Muhammed and his new religion reach the Byzantine Empire borders until Muhammed's death, which occurs in 632.
